That means informative newspaper indexes delivered on a timely, dependable schedule. It's an exclusive combination — one you can only get from University Microfilms International (UMI).

Our staff of bibliographic professionals reads, abstracts, and indexes hundreds of newspaper articles every day — more than 15,000 each month — just to make sure your patrons have fast, accurate access to the information in our indexed newspapers. And they compile each index to suit the needs of the casual patron and researcher alike:

TIMELINESS

Our indexes are delivered monthly — twice a month for The New York Times — with annual cumulations at year end. They're available when patrons need them.

INFORMATIVE ABSTRACTS

Every citation contains an informative abstract, so researchers can be certain of an article's content and value. No time wasted because of misleading headlines or insufficient detail.

BIBLIOGRAPHIC INTEGRITY

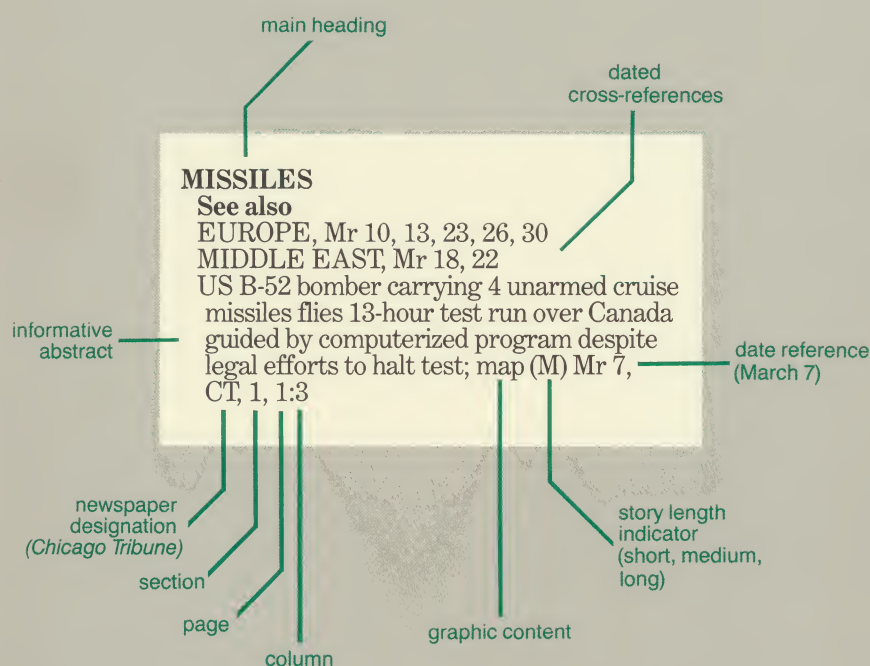

Our professional staff is composed of librarians, editors, and indexers trained in bibliographic research. They know what patrons look for and how they look for it.

THOROUGHNESS

We index all articles of substance, according to guidelines established with the editorial staff of each individual newspaper. Researchers are sure to find what they're looking for.

EASY ACCESS

For fast, accurate access, all citations are fully cross-referenced, and consistency is ensured by the use of a controlled terminology. There's no need to search through many classifications and headings to find the right reference.
